N3	Positioned at a level bridging the former Level 2 and Level 3 tests Newly established
N4	Approximately the same level as the former Level 3 test
N5	Approximately the same level as the former Level 4 test

3. More accurately measures Japanese-language proficiency with scaled score.

JLPT uses Scaled scores ⇔ Raw scores

- The same competency is given the same number of points in each test
- The same scale is always used to calculate scores for the same-level test

- * The highest degree of fairness can be maintained, as scaled scores never fluctuate based on the difficulty level of tests
- * Scaled scores can indicate an applicant's proficiency more accurately than raw scores do

For further details about the scaled score;

https://www.jlpt.jp/e/about/pdf/scaledscore_e.pdf

Example: A-san's test results in raw scores and scaled scores

A-san took N2 level tests in July as well as in December.
Below are his Listening test results.

N2 Listening	July	December (More difficult than July test)	Both numbers are the same, 10.
The number of correctly answered questions	10 out of 20	10 out of 20
Score per item X Number of correctly answered questions = Raw scores	2 x 10 = 20	2 x 10 = 20	Not sure if A-san's listening ability improved.
Scaled scores	20	25	Clear that A-san's listening ability improved.

※The data shown is only an example to explain the current JLPT scoring system, not for actual score calculation.

4. "JLPT Can-do Self-Evaluation List" is offered.

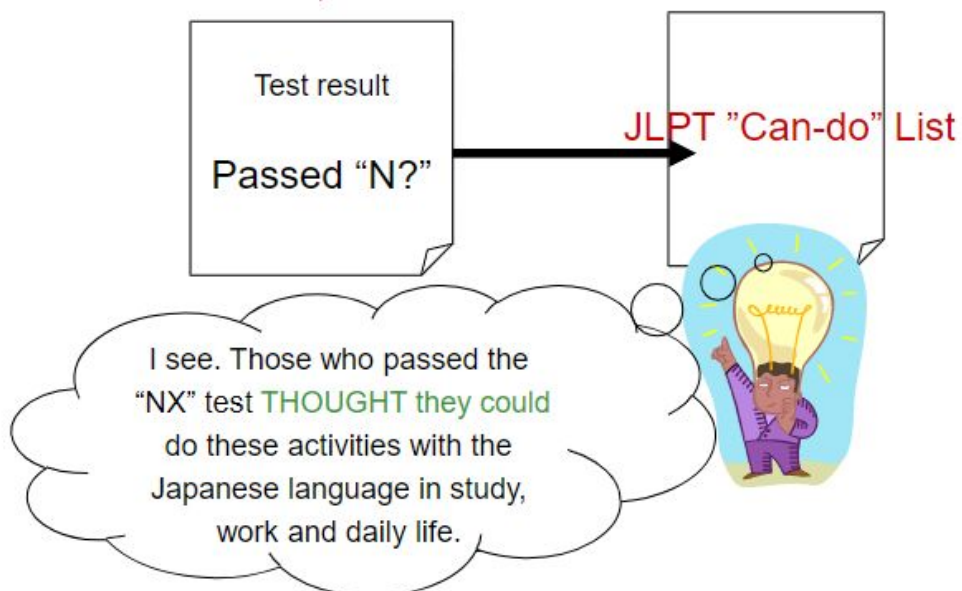

The list can be used by test takers and others as a reference to get an idea of "what successful test takers of a particular level can do in Japanese."
